The powering system used and the elevator's operating mechanism can also affect its cost. Common types of operating systems are AC, hydraulic and DC systems. Elevators using the hydraulic powering system are very efficient in terms of lifting motion. Another factor that impacts the cost of commercial elevators is the stage of construction in which the installation occurs. Elevators installed after the construction of a building is complete cost more compared to those installed during the time of construction.

Customized commercial elevators can cost more or less than standard commercial elevators. Some of the factors that increase or decrease the cost of custom specified elevators include the type and quantity of the materials used, the elevator's design, the total capacity and the maintenance costs.
