

Robert Sheppard

Date Submitted

12/22/2021

Comment

Glad to see this is finally being addressed. A property "line" between two single-family dwelling units is identifiable without requiring subdividing of the land, 49 other states do this. This requirement is strictly about determining fire separation and identifying a measurable point to/from that line. The answer should be yes.